Dear All,

November is upon us and, if you are feeling gloomy, bringing with it grey days, low light levels, cold, winter illnesses and not being able to go to the shops without having to endure Christmas music being piped at you already. If you are of a more cheerful disposition, however, November brings warm fires, bright star filled skies, crisp frosty mornings, fireworks, bonfires and the promise of Christmas around the corner.

In church in the last thirty years or so we have taken to calling November 'Kingdom Season', partly because Jesus spoke a lot about the Kingdom of God and partly to unite the various things we already did in church in November. So we keep on celebrating All Saints and All Souls and Remembrance Sunday but also give a little space to think about the Kingdom of God (which Matthew's Gospel calls the Kingdom of Heaven).

Thinking about the Kingdom reminds us that we are not made for war or to be consumers or wage-slaves. All human beings are made for something better. Where God is in charge the law is to love God with everything you have and are, and to love other people in the same way that you love yourself. We see glimpses of it wherever we see the fruit of God's Spirit- love, joy, patience, peace, kindness, generosity, gentleness, faithfulness and self-control. As Christians we strive to become people who will be at home in such a place.

Even November there must be glorious and the glimpses we see of it in our families, friends and neighbours make it so much easier to endure even the dullest of months,

I hope you find November is warm with the fruit of the Spirit,

With every blessing,

Rhiannon, Andrew, Samuel and Gaynor

THE LUCKIEST PEOPLE OF ALL Remembering Dale School

Who, to you, are lucky?
Maybe billionaires:
Tigers as pets, private jets,
Houses in London squares.
Well it might be nice to have the price
Of a yacht with a swimming pool;
But the luckiest people in all the world
Went to Dale School.
And the clock ticked, the Sun turned,
The tide ran, and the children learned.

Up there on the hill it was,
High above the bay:
Classrooms looking out to sea,
Ships passing all the day.
On the walls, maps of the world
For the girls and boys to know:
Right beside the Ocean–
No better place to grow!
And the clock ticked, the Sun turned,
The tide ran, and the children learned.

Of course, of course, it couldn't survive:
The best things get thrown away.
That precious school in a perfect place,
Just a memory today.
So shake the hand of anyone
Who was a pupil there:
That's what I call proper luck,
And luck that strong is rare.
And the clock ticked, the Sun turned,
The tide ran, and the children learned.

A very wide ranging talk by Hywel John on 20th October looked at how Museums as we know them today came into being from private collections through Municipal control to finally becoming part of the 'Museum' world. It was interesting how much of the present Museum catalogue came via collections made either over a number of lifetimes, and how much was the product of a single person's desire to obtaining items of interest. The talk much enjoyed by those who attended. We now move on to the last of the 2025 programme as we look forward to hearing about the work of the Friends of the Pembrokeshire Coast National Park (FPCNP). The Chair of FPCNP will be outlining the projects and activities undertaken by the Friends. The talk will be in Coronation Hall, Dale starting at 7.30pm on Wednesday 19th November.

The exhibition in The Old Stables Heritage Centre remains up but the hours of opening will vary during the winter. For November the Heritage Centre will be open every Monday 10-12. If you wish to visit outside this time, please make contact with either Yvonne or Harriet to arrange a visit.

We are starting work on the 2026 programme. If anyone had ideas as to talks, visits, workshops they think would be of interest to members of the group please let us know so we can try and arrange it.

If you would like to become a member please contact us. It costs just £5.00 per person a year.

North facing solar PV panels – yes, seriously!

This might surprise you: if your roof ridge runs West-East (or thereabouts) and you are thinking of having solar PV fitted, it is worth looking at installing PV modules on both the north and south facing sides of the roof. There are various reasons why…

1. In late spring, summer, and early autumn, the north side receives a considerable quantity of direct solar radiation; and it does well in the evening, when your domestic electricity demand can be at its highest.
2. Modern PV technology operates well in low light conditions; so, when the sky is bright overcast at any time of year, north facing modules can deliver appreciable amounts of electricity.
3. The north side of a roof tends to stay cooler than the south side. This gives north side modules an advantage, as PV efficiency falls with increasing temperature. In capital expenditure terms, it can be very cost-effective to have north side modules fitted at the same time as south side modules.

This video (see link below) is worth watching: it gives the performance figures for a south-facing house which has identical PV arrays fitted to the North and South sides of its roof; these were fully monitored for a year. The north side modules produced 35% of the total annual energy generation.

Dale WI

On Tuesday evening 21st Oct Dale WI hosted an open meeting in the Coronation Hall for a presentation by Welsh Water. The presentation was given by Ellie Lewis, their River Quality Liaison Manager, and not by Jenny Grubb, the Environmental Advisor, as had been advertised. The issues raised, by the large audience, were all about the treatment and disposal of sewage.

Most of our sewage problems generally, and more specifically on the Peninsula, relate to issues arising from the use of storm overflows. When it rains heavily the treatment works cannot cope with the volume of water coming through the system. This is when overflow of untreated effluent occurs. To get rid of storm overflows it would be necessary to dig up every driveway in Wales which would separate the rain water from roofs and driveways at source. This discharge via the use of storm overflow systems should never contain solid faecal matter. If anyone sees solid faecal matter in out rivers or sea please inform Welsh Water immediately.

The next problem with sewage relates to blocked pipes caused by the flushing of inappropriate items down the toilet. While not mentioned at the meeting some of you might be aware of the flooding of Broad Haven school yard and the closure of the road through Little Haven, both caused by blocked pipes.

It is not advised to go wild swimming after heavy rainfall even in areas with a Blue Flag. The run off can come through fields with animals, dirty roads and pavements and can be highly contaminated.

Locally, St. Ishmaels water treatment works seems to have the least number of problems. It has storage tanks which can cope with some excess rain fall leading to less storm overflow issues.

Dale has some very testing issues relating to its water treatment plant. Waste water has been tankered all Summer to Pembroke Dock and this problem still occurs intermittently despite Welsh Water relining of some of the pipework last May. Further relining is still to be completed. The reason for this is that when there is a high tide greater than 6 meters (which is very often) salt gets into the system. This affects the bacteria used to help with the breakdown of the effluent. The membrane treatment technology used in the plant cannot deal with this. Recently a similar style treatment work in Cardigan had to be rebuilt costing 20 million pounds. There are no plans to rebuild the Dale works but the possibility of laying a new pipe for this effluent to be dealt with in the Marloes works still exists. This is another very expensive option. Currently the capacity of Marloes treatment plant cannot deal with the present load and there are plans to improve this.

The Dale problems have not been helped by salt water coming up a water drainage pipe near the pub and into the meadow. This pipe has been repaired. However. the problem in the meadow is a very visible problem which nobody seems to own and doesn't really seem to be improving.

DALE AMATEUR DRAMATIC SOCIETY

As agreed by our membership, the remaining funds have been made over to the committee of Dale Coronation Hall. This was the home of DADS for all its existence; we gladly helped it develop into a great little theatre. As all its properties have already been disposed of, the three of us now stand down as officers of Dale Amateur Dramatic Society, which ceases to exist.

This is a sad moment, but it was inevitable; we hope to arrange some sort of retrospective event, celebrating what DADS achieved. In the meantime, we take this opportunity to thank everyone for their support and participation – in a lot of cases, over many years.

Giant Puffballs

from Rosemary Royle

I think one of the most dramatic of all fungi is the Giant Puffball. I had read about these before seeing them – I had a copy of "Food for Free" by Richard Mabey and so I knew what to look for and was exceptionally pleased to find one near our home in West Berkshire many years ago. We sliced it and fried it in bacon fat – it was truly delicious! And the lovely suede-y texture of the skin was delightful. Since then, we have seen a couple in the hedge near Maryborough Farm but that is all.

So I was intrigued to see a post on Tish Topics to the effect that one farmer has collected large numbers of Giant Puffballs and was offering them to all comers! I do hope they went to good homes! And I also hope that maybe a few were left alone in order to guarantee progeny in the years to come. Each Giant puffball has up to seven billion spores. I'll leave with a quote from Food for Free which says it all:

> Giant puffball Lycoperdon giganteum [A] Pl. 1
> Not uncommon in woods, fields and under hedges. August to October. A large spherical fungus, 4″ to 12″ across, white, smooth and leathery initially, turning yellow to green when old. Grows apparently straight from the ground, with little or no stalk. Flesh solid, spongy, and pure white when young.
> I think that if I had to choose my own favourite species from this book it would be the giant puffball. To come upon one of these suddenly is an astonishing experience, only rivalled by the taste of the first mouthful. There is not much point in searching deliberately for them; they are always unexpected, glinting like huge displaced eggs under a hedge or in the dark corner of a copse. If you are anything like me you will quickly strike up a strong affection for your ball, and cradle it back to be weighed and measured. It always seems sad to butcher the soft, kid-leather skin; but when you do, and cut through the flesh, the great flaky slabs of white meat that fall away are just as inviting.

Peninsula Papers editions

1) The next issue of PP will be, as usual, a "two monther" covering December and January. It will probably be delivered a little later than usual due to your editor's holiday commitments.
2) The following issue will also cover two months - February and March, again due to those pesky holidays!

Rare Gulls and an Anniversary

There has been an influx of Sabine's Gulls recently in the seas around Pembrokeshire. You have probably not seen one because they have been out at sea and mostly seen from the islands or from Strumble Head. Which is a pity as they are probably the smartest of all gulls. They have a dark grey head with a black collar behind it, a black bill with a big yellow tip and a simply amazing wing pattern. A few are seen most years passing by Strumble Head. They breed in the far north of America and Asia with a few in Greenland and Svalbard, then winter off the coasts of Africa and South America. I think it must be the Greenland/Svalbard birds we see as they pass this way on migration.

Exactly 20 years ago in November 2005 I wrote my first article for Peninsula Papers. It was also about a rare gull but this time it was seen at the Gann and stayed for a number of days. I thought you might like to read my contribution from November 2005:

"It cannot have escaped the notice of anybody living in these parishes that we have recently had a prolonged spell of wet and stormy weather. Whilst this can be miserable for most of us, it can be an exciting time for birdwatchers. This is because birds from America can get blown along by the storms and finish up in spots like Pembrokeshire. Usually the birds in question are migrating down the East coast of America when they get caught up in one of the big depressions which have been sweeping across the Atlantic.

On 6th November one such American visitor was spotted on an island in Pickleridge Pools. It was a Laughing Gull – a bit bigger than the Black Headed Gulls with dark legs and a heavy black bill. Much excitement was generated and pictures of this bird can now be seen on various "Birdy" web sites. In fact there were two individuals in the area – an adult and a "first winter" bird and they were around for several days. They looked quite content and healthy, but the question is "Will they ever get back to where they are supposed to be or are they destined to wander around on the wrong side of the Atlantic for ever?" My guess is that as gulls are long distance flyers which are happy out at sea, these gulls and the other Laughing Gulls which arrived in the western half of the UK at the same time, will eventually get to their correct winter destination."

PS: I have just counted them up - I have written 175 Wildlife notes over the years since 2005 - mostly one per edition but occasionally somebody else contributes one. They can all be read on the Marloes website at https://www.marloes.org.uk/page32.html or simply go to the Marloes Website https://www.marloes.org.uk/ and select the "Natural Environment" tab then select "Wildlife Notes from PP". Happy reading!
